In The Reed of God, Caryll Houselander gives flesh and spirit to solid theological affirmations about Mary; her portrait, designed for contemplation, is founded on the lengthy theological tradition but was enriched by her understanding of the complex human condition and her insight into the contemporary hunger for meaning. Houselander deals not only with the theological, but also stresses the historical realities of Mary: her peasant status, the problem of her pregnancy, and the anxiety and ...

The Reed of God Quotes by Caryll Houselander

Houselander's Reed of God is unremittingly Christocentric. She lays out for our contemplation not a woman of privilege, but a woman of grace so committed to Christ and his plan for redemption that her every thought and action is oriented to her son. My notes from the book:

ADVENT: A Time Of Preparation

The Reed of God ~ The Imaginative Conservative. To be filled with God's presence, one must be empty. The requisite emptiness, however, is not formless, but like the virginal emptiness of Our Lady: "It is emptiness like the hollow of a reed, the narrow riftless emptiness, which can have only one destiny: to receive the piper's breath and to utter the song that is in his heart."

My experience of Advent was forever changed after I read the twentieth century English Catholic writer Caryll Houselander's The Reed of God. Houselander's writing about Mary, the Mother of God, in this beautiful spiritual classic helped me to encounter the Advent spirituality of our Lady in a deeper way.

In her breathtaking book "The Reed of God," Caryll Houselander shows us the way to become this gift: "There is only one cure for fear — trust in God. That is why the beginning of Christ's being formed in us consists in echoing Our Lady's fiat; it is a surrender, a handing over of everything to God."
