Philippe Aries – A Radical View on The Social Construction of Childhood. The historian Philippe Aries has an extreme view on childhood as a social construction. He argues that in the Middle Ages (the 10th to the 13th century) ‘ the idea of childhood did not exist ’ – children were not seen as essentially different to adults like they are today.

Constructing and Reconstructing Childhood | Contemporary ... well being- constructing and reconstructing the childhood One of the major objectives of sociology of children is enhancing and improving child ' s well being. Well-being here may refer to various ingredients of childhood that includes the material conditions, development of relationship of a child with family, friends and teachers, physical and mental health and facing the fears of life.

James and Prout: Constructing and Reconstructing Childhood Constructing and Reconstructing Childhood The twentieth century is said to be ' century of the child ' and perhaps at no other time have children been so highly profiled. The ideology of the child-centred society gives ' the child ' and ' the interests of the child ' a prominent place in the policy and practices of legal, welfare, medical and educational institutions.
