Glory in the Glen is a marvelously detailed work on Scottish Revival. For me, some of the most interesting sections were: a) The story of Revival in Charlotte Baptist Chapel, Edinburgh b) Revival in the Salvation Army, Ayr in 1908 c) Jock Troup's work in Fraserburgh during the Fishermen's Revival of 1921-2; d) Perceptions of heaven and hell (p. 381), physical manifestations in Lewis in 1938 (p. 387), various Kilsyth incidents (pp. 427-8), and McKendrick's experience of 'God's telephone' (p ...

If you've ever flown in an airplane and gazed out the window for long enough, chances are that you've noticed what appears to be a halo encircling the plane's shadow against the clouds. It might seem spiritually inspiring — or maybe a little spooky — but what you saw was nothing paranormal. A glory, also known as a glory of the pilot, a pilot's glory or a pilot's halo, is actually an optical phenomenon, first observed by mountain climbers in the days before air travel became common.
