Abstract. Religion and spirituality have been linked to medicine and to healing for centuries. However, in the early 1900's the Flexner report noted that there was no place for religion in medicine; that medicine was strictly a scientific field, not a theological or philosophical one. In the mid to the latter 1900's there were several lay movements that started emphasized the importance of religion, spirituality and medicine.

The influence of religion on medicine can be both beneficial and harmful. This is seen specifically by Jehovah's Witnesses, a religious group who whilst accepting treatment refuse blood transfusions under the grounds that some Bible passages, demand that man should abstain from 'abstain from...fornication, from what is strangled and from blood.'
