Socio-Economic Review. Socio-Economic Review (SER) is the official journal of SASE. It is part of a broader movement in the social sciences that returns to the economy ’ s socio-political foundations. Devoted to advancing socio-economics, SER deals with the analytical, political and moral questions arising at the intersection of economy and society. Articles in SER explore how the economy is or should be governed by social relations, institutional rules, political decisions, and cultural values.

Opposing economic imperialism in theory as well as in the real world, Socio-Economic Review provides space for scholarly critique of theoretical ap-proaches that model human society as an economy; reduce human action to “ rational choice ” ; and define away the importance of culture, values, obligations and the like for economic and social action. Instead it supports, as scientifically sound and practically productive, a social science that treats the modern economy as a historical ...
